Intention Setting

You may be feeling a little overwhelmed right now, which is completely understandable. What's important to remember is all of your feelings matter and acknowledging them is the first step in supporting a healthy emotional and physical state.

Set your intention for 2021

As you embark on another lockdown due to the Covid-19 pandemic it will be important to maintain your own self-care.

When you are feeling overwhelmed try to take 5 minutes to figure out what is going on for you. Take some deep breaths, tap into where you are feeling any tension in your body and spend a few moments acknowledging any feelings that are coming up for you, even the negative ones. Sometimes writing down your thoughts and feelings or journaling can really support you to express them.

Setting intentions can also be useful in order to feel hopeful and positive about the weeks and months ahead. You might have already done some of this with your child or family together but now it's time to focus solely on you.

I intend...

- to find what brings me joy
- to share how I am feeling with a friend
- to love and be loved
- to be more present
- to be grateful for what I have
- to focus on times that I feel empowered
- to help empower others
- to build my resilience
- to do something kind for myself everyday

Take your time to identify and write down an intention or set of intentions that support you in reaching your goals.

You can choose to say this intention when you wake up in the morning and again before going to sleep at night. Or if you engage in a regular mindfulness practice, then you can say your intention to yourself or write it in a journal each time to begin your practice.
